Graduation 2023

Dear Friend,

This year, we graduated sixteen seniors. While that number may sound small—especially given the grand graduation jargon of “changing the world”—there is something about a small group of great souls that actually can, by God’s grace, change the world as the Twelve did. When I consider the young men who graduate from our school, or these sixteen in particular, I see strengths that few possess today: minds for truth, hearts with music and poetry, souls afire with the flare of the spiritual life, and a real sense of friendship. These graduates can make a tremendous difference despite their numbers because they have learned to live bravely and beautifully.

Here is a story to show you the stuff these graduates are made of. John Paul Adams, our head cantor and long-time piper, applied to the Virginia Military Institute and received an opportunity to interview for a scholarship. He arrived and was set before a panel of uniformed men and women. The VMI faculty and officers began with questions about Gregory the Great Academy—about the meaning behind the crest and the Latin motto, Bonum Verum Pulchrum. They wanted to know why John Paul went to a school where he couldn’t have a cell phone. John Paul answered all confidently. He was doing well.

Then one of the female officers asked, “What has your ethical training been?” John Paul paused for the first time. He asked for clarification. The woman leaned forward. “What would you say is an important ethical issue today and how would you solve it?” John Paul looked earnestly at her and said, “I think abortion is the biggest ethical problem of our day.” He went on to state that while changing the law is one aspect of solution, it also required that the culture be changed, that the hearts of people be changed to see the tragedy that abortion is and would therefore never desire to dispose of an innocent, defenseless child for selfish reasons. The room was silent for a spell before the next topic was put forward.

John Paul Adams received a full scholarship with compliments from all present. And we offer our compliments as well—compliments for being fearless and faithful, for exercising the manly virtue he worked hard to achieve here, for being courageously and courteously Catholic. John Paul Adams and the rest of his classmates are the kinds of young men we look to send out into the world—and they might very well change it in the same way that each of their worlds were changed by coming to St. Gregory’s.

Thank you for your support for John Paul and his honest, hardworking classmates. As they depart, another class rises to take their place and prepare to bring the light of Christ into a darkening world. Please remember these strong young men in your charitable giving and your prayers, and help them make ready to respond to the challenges that abound with joyful, Catholic courage. Make a gift today.

In Christ,

Luke Culley

For the fifth time in their history, the Highlanders claimed the Pennsylvania state title, competing against talented athletes and strong rugby programs from gigantic schools. Playing with discipline, heart, and the trust born of close friendship in the Faith, the lads from Gregory the Great never lost a match and offered everything to Christ the King and Our Lady Queen of Victory.
